Abstract (en)
A ball game apparatus having a main housing made preferably of a plastic material is provided with a simulated playing field on which there are disposed goals and a plurality of simulated players belonging to two teams wherein the simulated players are mounted on axes distributed on said playing field and the axes are connected via a transmission assembly to master control devices. Axes carrying figurines of the same team are connected to a single master control device via a transmission mechanism so that the simulated players belonging to a same team are rotatable at the same time by turning a single master control device. Simulated players are disposed on the corners of a regular polygon so that the opportunity to compete for a ball is substantially equalised. <IMAGE>
