Abstract (en)

[origin: EP0997171A1] The body (10) for dice, used in games, is a polygon body with seven faces of two parallel end faces (12) and five equal side surfaces between them. Each end surface is an equiangular pentagon, at right angles to the side surfaces. The gap between the end surfaces is larger than the inner periphery (X) of the end surfaces. On throwing the dice, each end surface has the same probability of lying downwards as any of the side surfaces. The dice body is wood, a suitable plastic or metal.
