Abstract (en)
[origin: DE19747769A1] A household appliance, such as an oven, with a front panel running along the width of said appliance and extending over the front side thereof is already known per se. Said panel is formed by a metal extruded section secured to the household appliance and is provided with control and/or display elements. In order to improve the stability of the front panel, the invention is characterised in that said panel extends in the form of a cylindrical partition section around a vertical axis along the width of said panel and is provided with a substantially homogenous curvature.
