Abstract (en)

[origin: EP1039043A2] A threaded shaft on the fitting projects through an installation aperture, and a nut with tensioner is placed over it. The nut (11) has at least one projection (22) to act as thread. This projects into the installation aperture (16) and is formed to yield for axial attachment in attachment direction. The projection engages positively like a rigid thread, against the threads (23) of the threaded shaft against direction of attachment. The projection is formed esp. like a spring tongue, which pref. extends radially into the aperture and extends at an angle of approx. 45 degrees relative to it.
