Abstract (en)

[origin: EP1048891A2] The natural gas supply method has the over production of the natural liquid gas during low demand intervals converted into liquified gas using nitrogen, oxygen, or argon, for storage in a liquid gas tank (14), from which it can be extracted during peak demand intervals, for supplementing the natural gas supplied to the distribution pipeline network (1) after conversion back into gas. An independent claim for a continuous natural gas supply device is also included.
