Abstract (en)

[origin: WO9951100A1] A method for producing baked articles comprises the successive steps of mixing a dough, forming the dough, proofing the formed dough, and baking the proofed dough. The formed dough is heated only by steaming thereof as at least a part of at least one of the steps of proofing and baking of the dough. Thus, the steaming may be performed as a start of the proofing of the dough, as a finish of the proofing of the dough, or the whole proofing of the dough may be performed only by the steaming thereof. A plant for producing baked articles comprises a separate housing for heating the formed dough only by steaming thereof as at least a part of the proofing or the backing.
