Abstract (en)
A fastening lever for sports shoes comprises a base which is rigidly coupled to a first flap and is provided with two shoulders between which a U-shaped lever arm is articulated, a traction member being pivoted between the wings of the U-shaped arm. The traction member is slidingly guided, at its free end, in two slots formed in a bar which has, at its free end, a pin which is selectively associated with one of a plurality of teeth of a rack which is associated with a second flap. The traction member slides in contrast with a preloaded elastically deformable member which is adapted to maintain a constant closure load. <IMAGE>
