Abstract (en)

[origin: WO0054959A1] The invention relates to a method for producing molded parts from interlocking fastening elements (10) which consist of a thermodeformable plastic material. The respective interlocking fastening element (10) is heated at least to its molding temperature and is then brought into the defined shape by way of at least one molding tool (12). The invention provides a method for producing molded parts in the form of interlocking fastening elements that affords geometries of the interlocking fastening elements that can be produced at low costs and that can be immediately used for a large number of applications.
