Abstract (en)
[origin: WO03034865A1] An improved folding table is characterized by the following features: a) at least one table top half (3') can be displaced by a distance away from the other opposite table top half (3') while forming a gap (41); b) when displacing the folding table into its folded out position of use, the displaceable table top half (3') can be moved away from the other table top half while forming the gap (41) between both facing front or limiting edges of both table top halves (3'), and; c) a stop limit (42) is provided whereby the displacement path of the displaceable table top half (3') is outwardly limited by a displacement limit (42).
