Abstract (en)
A method is disclosed of constructing a chamber 10, such as a cellar, which is at least partially sunken into the ground without the prior excavation of a hole. The method includes: a) forming one or more ground anchors below the intended location in the ground of the chamber, b) providing above the intended location in the ground of the chamber, a prefabricated and substantially hollow lateral wall structure; c) forcing said wall structure down into said ground towards its intended location using the one or more ground anchors; and d) excavating spoil from within a sunken portion of said wall structure so as to clear therein a space. <IMAGE>
