Abstract (en)

Concerns a procedure for producing tiles or other similar products, formed from blocks (1) of stone, even fissured, material straight from the quarry and which has substantial defects within the mass, such as cuts, chinks and the like. Such a procedure is characterised in that it comprises, in order, the following treatment steps: 1: cutting of the quarried block to form blanks (3); 2: coating the two larger surfaces of the blank; 3: cutting the resin-coated blank to obtain tiles (6). <??>The procedure also foresees that, during the cutting steps, both the blank and the tiles be locked on the support frame (7) through the action of a plurality of combs (8). <IMAGE>
