Abstract (en)
A laminar label consists of a printable layer (14) which can be printed on at least one side, a carrier material layer (30) which has a silicone layer (32) on the side facing the printable layer, and an intermediate layer (34) between the two. A laminar label consists of a printable layer (14) which can be printed on at least one side, a carrier material layer (30) which has a silicone layer (32) on the side facing the printable layer, and an intermediate layer (34) between the two. An adhesive lacquer layer (24) is partially located between the printable layer and the intermediate layer, and sticks to the intermediate and/or printable layer. A self adhesive layer (36) is located between the intermediate layer and the silicone layer, and is releasably connected to them. The carrier and intermediate layers are transparent to UV radiation. The printable layer contains a polyolefin and the intermediate layer consists of a polypropylene film. The laminate is formed by applying adhesive to the intermediate layer on the silicone facing side, printing the printable layer on at least one side, applying an adhesive lacquer and then joining the layers.
