Abstract (en)

A stone (30) for suspending from an article of jewellery, the stone having a crown (12) a pavilion (14), a table (16), a girdle (18), and a culet (20). The improvement includes a throughbore (34) extending from the crown (12) to the pavilion (14) of the stone (30) allowing the stone to have improved structural integrity and to have improved luster by virtue of reducing refraction, reflection, and dispersion errors, and when suspended by the throughbore (34) from the article of jewellery, by virtue of eliminating visually obstructive conventional settings, has improved scintillation, improved visibility, and gives an impression that it is floating in air or dancing relative to the article of jewellery.
