Abstract (en)
[origin: WO2004105894A1] The present invention provides a golf tee in which a body part (60) with a ball seat (61) is separated from a peg part (70). The golf tee includes the body part (60). The body part has the ball seat (61) to seat thereon a golf ball, upper coupling supports (62) protruded outwards from opposite positions of the body part, and a coupling protrusion (63) provided on a lower end of the body part. The golf tee further includes the peg part (70) coupled to the lower end of the body part (60). The peg part (70) has a contact rim (73) provided on an upper end of the peg part to correspond to an edge of the lower end of the body part, and lower coupling supports (72) protruded outwards from opposite positions of the peg part. The golf tee further includes a pair of elastic connection units 80 coupled to the upper coupling supports of the body part and the lower coupling supports of the peg part.
