Abstract (en)

[origin: WO2005089622A2] An apparatus for cleaning shoes, such as soccer, rugby, golf shoes and other sports shoes, including a main structure that supports supporting members that perform a translational motion and are accommodated on the bottom of channels formed by the main structure. The channels accommodate a plurality of nozzles that wash the soles of the shoes and are provided with brushes for cleaning the upper and for containing the sprays. The apparatus includes a transformer for transforming the normal mains voltage into a low voltage in order to supply power to the translational supporting means. The transformer is accommodated in a second structure separate from the main structure.
