Abstract (en)

The method involves inserting a groove and extending the groove in proximity of a coating. The groove receives a body with a round cross section in the direction of its longitudinal extension. The groove is connected with a conically extending groove such that the grooves are filled with glue. Parts of a chipboard (1) are folded about the inclined and glued surfaces that limit the conically extending groove. An independent claim is also included for a furniture cabinet for a space with reduced space requirement.
