Abstract (en)

[origin: WO2006010397A1] The invention relates to a method for generation and sale of frankings (110), which can be used for sending mail (130) from a customer (20) to a receiver (30). The frankings are thus preferably produced on an electronic mailbox (10), whereby the generation and the printing out can be carried out in a highly personalised manner by using stored customer data (40) and receiver addresses (50) entered by the customer concerned. In addition to personalised address input a franking comprises a unique identification code which can be used for franking security as well as transport control and monitoring.
