Abstract (en)
A type of football game machine using model people kept in place by magnetic force in which the football, goal, goalkeepers and football players all rely on magnets and an internal metallic board within the football pitch which creates a magnetic attraction used for the purpose of holding those items in place, with the result that the football players and goalkeepers are not restricted to tracks in any way, allowing the scope of movements of the football players to be unrestricted. Apart from this, both the football players and goalkeepers have internal joint structures, each movement thus provides a realistic simulation of the action of a real football player kicking a football, allowing a major breakthrough in the extent of simulation, making this football game machine more interesting and playable.
