Abstract (en)

[origin: EP1911922A2] The invention relates to a substantially U-shaped clamp functioning as aid for fixing a frame in an opening arranged in a wall, comprising two side panels which extend substantially parallel to each other and which are mutually connected by a connecting panel extending substantially transversely of the side panels, wherein the side panels are adapted to extend in the installed position on either side of the wall part, and an engaging element which extends at an acute angle to the connecting panel from the connecting panel to the side of the connecting panel remote from the side panels, and which is adapted to engage behind a part of the frame for fixing, wherein the engaging element extends in the direction transversely of the fold line between the side panels and the connecting panel. As a result of this measure the direction of the forces during loading coincides with the longitudinal direction of the engaging element, so that the engaging element can better withstand these forces.
