Abstract (en)

The invention is a new system with modular elements for building fitted wardrobes or kitchens, comprising a series of finished modular elements having different widths. The finished modular elements have widths that are such that the combination of several modular elements of various widths makes it possible to cover the entire wall and to obtain a fitted piece of furniture or a piece of furniture having the desired width. The door panels of said finished modular elements are in turn composed of one or more staves with the same or different width that, once placed side by side and joined to each other according to suitable combinations, allow door panels to be obtained that are suitable for each finished modular element.
