Abstract (en)

[origin: WO2007104553A2] The invention relates to a device for selectively covering or displaying an object mounted on a wall, preferably a flat screen. Said device comprises a covering element, preferably a photomural, a fixing device and a displacing device, the covering element being displaceable by means of the displacing device arranged on the fixing device, from a position in which the object is essentially completely covered into a position in which the object is essentially completely exposed. The invention is characterised in that the fixing device is arranged in relation to the outer periphery of the object seen in the direction of the wall, outside the object, and preferably at a distance therefrom. The fixing device and the displacing device are covered essentially completely by the covering element in any possible relative position of the covering element in relation to the object.
