Abstract (en)
[origin: EP2327818A1] A knitting method of knitted fabric capable of making inconspicuous a set-up portion formed by entwining knitting yarns so as to tangle each other between front and back needle beds. A yarn feeder 4 is moved in one longitudinal direction of the needle bed to form a hooked loop (in a needle C), and is then moved in the other longitudinal direction immediately after. Subsequently, a yarn feeder 6 is moved in the one longitudinal direction of the needle bed to form a hooked loop, and is then moved in the other longitudinal direction immediately after. By continuously repeating the movement of the yarn feeders 4, 6, and the formation of hooked loops, the set-up portion is formed, in which the knitting yarn fed from the yarn feeder 4 and the knitting yarn fed from the yarn feeder 6 are entwined so as to tangle each other between the front and back needle beds.
