Abstract (en)

[origin: WO2011042503A1] The invention relates to an arrangement and a method for performing an interactive simulation, to a corresponding computer program, and to a corresponding computer-readable storage medium, all of which can be used with patients in particular in the therapeutic and medical area in the course of neurological, neuropsychological, and psychological diagnosis and therapy. To this end, an arrangement for interactive simulation is provided, comprising means for visually displaying scenes using visualization elements, a rotatable placement area for test subjects, at least one data processing device for generating and/or controlling at least the visual display, and means for data entry for controlling the simulation. The visualization elements are arranged in a substantially closed ring or polygon without rotating relative to the real world. At least part of the visualization elements is arranged in a pivoting or foldable manner in the ring or polygon, and can be removed from and/or displaced on the ring or polygon of the visualization elements. Alternatively or additionally, the ring or the polygon of the visualization elements is at least partially displaceable, preferably slidable, pivotable, and/or foldable relative to the rotating placement area.
