Abstract (en)
A method and apparatus for holding or supporting a post in a preselected position such that a person working by themselves can fix the post in said position. The apparatus including a post support means having a recess or channel defined therein for supporting a post in use, and leg support means having a recess or channel defined therein for supporting one or more legs in use. The one or more legs are used to help support the post in a required orientation and/or position and the longitudinal axis of the recess or channel of the post support means is provided in a non-parallel orientation to a longitudinal axis of the recess or channel of the leg support means.
