Abstract (en)

Disclosed is a work glove with cut-off sections wherein the cut-off sections woven thin are formed at predetermined portions of finger portions of the glove so as to be cut off easily, so that when the finger portions of the glove are sucked into a machine because of carelessness of a worker or machine malfunction, a predetermined part of a relevant finger portion of the glove can be easily separated from the predetermined portion of the finger portion of the glove, thereby effectively preventing a negligent accident that fingers of the worker are sucked into a machine. According to the present, there is provided a work glove woven with a plurality of threads and having a coating layer formed on a palm portion of the glove including each finger portion and on the glove in whole, wherein the work glove includes a cut-off section woven thinner than the other portion of the finger portion, which is formed at a predetermined portion of the finger portion such that a predetermined part of the finger portion is cut off at a predetermined portion of the palm portion and separated therefrom, so that when the predetermined part of the finger portion is sucked into a machine, the predetermined portion of the finger portion is cut off, thereby preventing a negligent accident occurring when hands of the worker is sucked into the machine, in advance.
