Abstract (en)

[origin: WO2012001723A1] A device designed for transporting fragile and precious objects comprises a boxlike container, suspended inside which in a crossed configuration by means of their elastic extensions or stays (14, 14a, 16, 16a) are a first, bottom, membrane (18), designed to receive the fragile object, and a second, top, membrane (20), which has the task of covering the object itself and of appropriately tensioning the first membrane so that the object is suspended elastically in a sort of cradle, formed by said two membranes, preferably equidistant from the walls of the container itself and hence protected from any impact.
