Abstract (en)

[origin: WO2013007498A1] What is described is a tool for inserting or removing a tang-free wire thread insert, the entraining blade of which can be fastened manually within the axial recess of the spindle body with the aid of a latching connection and can be exchanged. In addition to the reliable removal of wire thread inserts, this tool structure also ensures a quick exchange of worn entraining blades of the tool. What is furthermore described is a process for producing such a tool.
